I wanted to be sure to reach you;

by

SaeidVahidi
Class of 2009

A thesis submitted to the faculty of Wesleyan University in partial fulfillment of the requirements for the Degree of Bachelor of Arts with Departmental Honors from the College of Letters

Middletown, Connecticut

April, 2009
I wanted to be sure to reach you;

poems by Saeid Vahidi
with thanks to Ethan Kleinberg and Kevin Goodan
CONTENTS

[In boundless infinite astronomy] 6

I.

[Ex nihilo the sun is rising up] 8
[However long I've stayed it's time to pack] 9
[The sun has risen, finally] 10
[The frozen night cars crashing driving doughnuts] 11

II.

[New day today: watch the sun rise] 14
[The snow is falling, pieces catch] 15
[Death in the family. You have left] 16

III.

[food / for thought cafeteria] 18
the Theory 19
[The rolling countryside of your skin brown] 20
Decanter 21
Day / Night 22
Supermarket Group Portrait 23
the History 24
Sonnet 25

IV.

[Rt. 18 S] 27
[I am the sand the strand the beach the shore] 28
[The reckoning is coming and I'm trying] 29
[Can the subaltern speak? You'll hear me out] 30
[Like waking up at noon and watching snow] 31
[I was sitting alone, my arms around] 32
[So everybody was already blazed] 33
[Let's talk about emotions the sad way] 34
[Commotion in the foreground of the wet] 35
[Maybe I will go back a couple one] 36
[March 2nd snow. I feel so damn depressed] 37
[Well, time will tell. For now I fluctuate] 38
[No explanations: where I'd like to end] 39
[Left from New Brunswick, head to New York] 40

V.

[No way of knowing if] 42
[If not the cleansing downpour,] 43
[Goddamnit, I'm up early and my nose is running.] 44
[At Martin Luther King's memorial] 45
[The rising sun is yet another sun] 46
In boundless infinite astronomy is it love if no one reciprocates?
True love: is that outside of gravity?
To love: to understand a star relates its history, apart from it, negated, out of existence? Is it to subsume oneself in brief celestial light created in distant time? And then why does love loom?
The unaccountable is that which changes.
The irresponsible is that which changes.
The firmament, in which a star deranges itself laboriously, it arranges these dying stars, including all of them, as if encapsulating all of them.
Ex nihilo the sun is rising up;
from nothing il gran sole sale su;
out of the night the day emerges so unlike the darkness that it registers as its own entity, an organism in its own right. An individual significant other. The moon is ice stuck in the sky. The sun is flooding it.
However long I’ve stayed it’s time to pack the few things that I have and leave this place. I have my underwear and shorts, my black backpack that has a book, notepad, and case of pens in it. Why bring that to the beach? It only takes a breeze to set my mind off on perambulations, free of speech and other hardships. If the stars aligned in that special alignment that they’ve got for me, perhaps I’d know precisely what I’m doing with this book and pen and plot of land with which I’ve been warming my butt up to this frigid moment.
The sun as risen, finally, but I am still unsettled. We have been up for too long, and I’m worse than you are. A goldfish floating in its container. The jar’s filled with shit and water. Will it be this way much longer is the question:

the lone desire being clear water. And I’m this absentminded fish, not even gold. I’m floating, lost; where could I swim to? Can you see the water that I’m in? I’d like for you to see this grayish water.

the frozen night cars crashing driving doughnuts into the earth the grass that forces its way up our feet as always pushing down even when we’re asleep or dead the rush of things the past exuberance of things summer’s demand that takes away too much the night my ruinheart unbroken in a moment that I could hate water’s cold a wet white shirt sucked to the skin the rolls white mesh of swimming trunks between a pair of hairy cheeks the grain of sand that got into the tip flat feet that slap down on the wet hard packed sand volleyball nets in this great expansive edge cigar smoke thick stench wet cigarette butts afloat ugly seabirds the cotton candy strewn over the sand a thin and tall redbull floats on a surge a tampon points its face imperiously at the sky the jelly fish everywhere a sabretooth without its legs left arm subject to lacerations some sandy crust and marinara sauce a variation on a theme potato chips and tortilla chips the boardwalk looming birdshit and the dry sand on the street cars parked at an angle as far as the eye can see well what a fool I am to walk barefoot in this place plastic bottles red caps prizeless caps tar in the heat to keep the gravel earth of cars from sundering an empty thong bikini you became past time my pretty girls run on the sand and smile and disappear old baseball caps are missing their head wet sand matching sweat stains toilet paper rolling we observe the delicate unraveling hearts tuned not really broken babyblue surfboard a wonder what the innards are from here the beach invisible was ours and now rocky sicilian shored weeds growing up and disemboweled vhs tapes films dark ribbons over crying sand the fading and weeping the desire for an extreme expression but that is not given us
II
New day today: watch the sun rise obscurely. From this cold white pane it seems these leaves are frozen, yet there is no sign of winter, snow, whatever, but here’s the sunrise arriving as it always does:

important; unremarkable.
So this is what it’s like to have some light again. You too are as if frozen, beautiful, this leaf that fades. What’s there to do?

I could get up and get an egg cheese sausage ketchup bagel, but why wreck my day if I can sleep?

The ugly blind is glowing and,
I’m sorry, but the light is here.
The snow is falling, pieces catch
in my hair, melting as they rest.

The winter’s come; and, sure, it will pass, but “one must regard the frost.”

Dear lazy summertime is gone.
I’m trying to have faith, but when will our warm day return to us?

The formulaic fails: I’d rather the warmth and that which follows, not long days and endless exercise.

Death in the family. You have left to visit with your mother, and, you know, I haven’t thought of you, and it’s been pleasant. Like I said what but a sandwich is there left for me to do? These days I have a hard time getting out of bed, with waking up from these long dreams.

III
food / for thought cafeteria
of books french aphorisms

hot out the oil holy leafy green verses a little bit

on your bean or ham burger whichever literature you prefer hot doggerel in a bun try the new england style

just like some people try thebrussphilsproutsophy
the Theory

Somewhere

in Paris (center of the 20th Century) an old man, speaking in a refined idiolect, discovers language.
The rolling countryside of your skin brown.
The burgeoning culture of laughter brief.
My strange, adopted homes, because the crown has thus decreed, identify me thief and excommunicate. Eradicated
Decanter

The empty signifier’s empty because we emptied it!
So why get angry at the glass
when it was us that drank the water, milk, and applejuice?

But it was overflowing:
the table needed us; we needed it.

We sacrificed so we could eat just as we always had or better than we had.
We’re so fat now. My belly’s huge and I am very thirsty.

Day / Night

I.

Gray light, new day leaks through the window.
Just to meet me in the morning.
Vanity of vanities. The sun goeth down and hasteth to his place where he arose.

II.

I’m glad I didn’t die before I met you.
But now I don’t care.
Supermarket Group Portrait

We’re all looking for food of varying degrees of healthfulness and thinking much about each other. And the critics notes, “it’s evident that not one line of sight intrudes upon another or invades—”
The History

Linguistical warriors clunking and being clunked. In Eur India. By the water.
Sonnet

This our world, like a soul, flutters and falls and smacks its smallish head on the grey path. First it had smacked into clean glass; then walls, being so blinded, in red pain. It hath but little life, it seems. The children seem intrigued by this, and poke it with a stick.
Rt. 18 S
and I am on my way
towards my home that’s not a home or mine.
I don’t know much about the beach today or the beach yesterday, I read the sign and it says go this way. I try to listen and usually succeed. It’s really cold so I can’t really smell the smell I christen familiarfishsmell. My jokes get old:
you can predict my tone: abrupt huh boom to ease myself out of uneasiness.
Well, here I am again. Feels like there’s room enough for everybody. Craziness:
some affectation’s brought me here tonight:
alone, away from you, cold, not alright.
I am the sand the strand the beach the shore;
hightide you water passed the point of no return ruining my sandcastle for no reason other than I oughtta know better. You brought your things with you and settled.
After the water dried up it was hard to differentiate I you who meddled in whose affairs. Remnants of mollusks jarred messages and ugly seagulls. With time this passed. I can’t see straight who’s who you broke I broke we’re like crushed glass like slime like briny picklejuice. But I misspoke perhaps dear dune of sand protector of violent intrusion I am floating out of love.
The reckoning is coming and I’m trying to be as calm and strong as possible. The time for preparation underlying the framework of this moment has its pull, yet it’s cemented in the past. No time, late for revisions, I must let it be; my eyes are astigmatic and sublime in scalding, salty water from the sea: my mind no longer prances off on its perambulations, but broods, curses, paces along coastlines, falling into mad fits. Desiring love, or peace, in the wrong places, I am returning to your side with hope and skepticism. Either way:
Can the subaltern speak? You’ll hear me out but only on your terms, which are shorthand for your conception of, your roundabout hatred for, how I see and speak the land conjoined with this diluted, watery expanse holding us in. I open up my mouth and you condemn my cavity, my fillingridden teeth. You’re throwin up your hands into the air, crying for help now, from me, but not when we were alone:
I was your boy; you came to me in kelp, green seaweed wrapped around your skin, earth tone integument, your swinging hips, straight spine.
I was submerged in love, blind in the brine.
Like waking up at noon and watching snow
filling the air days after it has snowed, these memories of revelation blow and fluctuate above the snowplowed road below my cousin’s building where I wrote you funny, inappropriate emails about a year ago. I was a boat at sea: the crewmen didn’t know that sails could do this, anchors that. I was a mess and that usedbookstore was invigorating, the coffeeshop an inspiration. Yes, you helped sustain me here while celebrating new years back home. We called each other at the turn. And I still rock your hometown hat.
I was sitting alone, my arms around my legs and head, and wasn’t sure enough to let it out. Rising, the water found my toes and I pulled back. That kinda stuff made me feel weird, but its incessancy, its slack predictability, was nice and comforting somehow. Then, lost at sea, I wondered what had happened. Water ice cold suddenly, and I felt heavy, weak, unable to support myself and swim back to the shore. I couldn’t even speak; I felt really dumb: drowning on a whim, hardly remembering the way it started, gasping for air with pale salty lips parted.
So everybody was already blazed when I got there. I had no such intentions granted last night I was confused and dazed, ending the night with an email that mentions how I’m too drunk and high and eating this Baba Ghanoush wrap thing. I wrote don’t worry, I am heartbroken too. Something’s amiss:
there is no music and there is no hurry to change that. Now this vaguely racist girl and her friend play Beyoncé from a phone; no end in sight, I kinda wanna hurl a pillow at their faces, but, alone in my dissatisfaction, lacking means,
I up and leave these “Single Ladies” queens.
Let’s talk about emotions the sad way,
the way I’m feeling now, and let us bridge this awful gap and come together, say whatever’s on our mind, open the fridge in our communal kitchen and feast, feast on the leftovers left to us by us and laugh about the rotten stuff: at least it’s there for us to share. So what’s the fuss really about? Why separate, divide, dissect, scalpel, autopsy, soon to be essential parts that will be one inside us anyway? So please let us be free:
please take my spoon, my plate, my microwave,
and taste my LeanHotPocket, which you crave.
Commotion in the foreground of the wet brilliant horizon roaring calm beyond my knowledge understanding I forget what it was like exactly when our bond in at least name existed when I was adrift out there. What was it like to be aboard that lost seawrecked vessel because I’m losing that perspective how to see the world the land from sea because I’m beached. To be honest, I don’t know what I need. I’m scared to voyage out: our voyage reached a point of no return. We have been freed of our moorings I guess. I guess I’m free to do whatever
Maybe I will go back a couple one more times before I’m back to friends and books.
I might might not be able to on Mon Tues Wednesday after Montreal it looks uncertain at best worst. You called today:
I was asleep against the window train
New Jersey Transit wait this number hey.
It was so easy: I thought sadness pain but you I joke you laugh. That then, this now.
Cut off I’m in a tunnel now I call you back we plan to talk again. So wow I guess we’re laughing now again and all yea the logistics all we’ll figure out tonight in person Middletown no doubt.
March 2nd snow. I feel so damn depressed. I do not want to write another poem about you, but I’m here. I could have guessed that I’d be here again. Soon I’ll go home. My parents will embrace me, and I hope this time I’ll be more whole upon arrival. This is an empty hope. I need to cope with pain and not pretend it’s gone. Survival in difficult but manageable times. What’s wrong with me? I am rejected: no misgivings there. Sometimes I count your crimes and tell myself I’m happier, although I don’t deny my loneliness. Not much changed, I’m a wreck today. We’re out of touch.
Well, time will tell. For now I fluctuate predictably, which doesn’t make it worse or better. Far as I can tell, narrate and analyze, prediction is a nurse and quack observing fluctuating pain: so, on a scale from one to ten, how bad (excluding fractions)? Wait, are you insane? I mean what’re you talkin’ bout? Sad, glad, mad, mad upset, a touch humiliated, what could you possibly expect from me? I guess that I’m a five that has berated itself ironically and hopelessly. I’m sorry no I’m not I don’t know what to say to do. Is this a papercut?
No explanations: where I’d like to end
this babble, but, really, it’s the beginning, departure, when it happens: I befriend estrangement, what the hell, all these breadwinning and cheesy formulations. I just can’t afford to be refined with prejudice.
Recycled ideas. You as a slant of rosy light inside an edifice where others go to pray. It’s kinda sad.
“My love for you is overpowering,”
“It doesn’t mean it’s there,” even “I’m glad I didn’t die before I” lingering:
the lyrics are too true. Less than a week now, after all this waiting, when we’ll speak.
Left from New Brunswick, headed to New York, and from Penn Station on to Montreal, back to Penn Station, which is in New York, and once again New Brunswick so I call and catch a ride to home sweet home right next to Home Depot, right next to Target, Hess, Subway, my Domino’s. I’d like to text you how I’m feeling, but I guess that’s less than justifiable the way things are, the way they’ve been in the preceding weeks. The enigmatic place is not that far, about an hour south, yet D.C. speaks to me, nagging me, so I gotta go back to the beach some other time, you know.
V
No way of knowing if we’ll meet again. Odds are we won’t be granted extra time, the time that we wished for. From set to rise

we were together in the ocean’s cool, wet embrace, which is the shore.
And thus our passing meetings must be taken as the broken gems or rare stones that they seem to be.

They must, each chance we get, be such

because the tide recedes.
If not the cleansing downpour,

the musty ejaculation.
If not the imploding orgasm,

the nail skimming the spine.
If not scratching the itch,

the patience to wait it out.
If not serenity,

the filling glass of water.
If not the unlit seabed,

the tub’s brilliant porcelain.
Goddamnit. I’m up early and my nose is running.

It’s allergies. Perhaps it’s the condition of the immune system at this hour. My legs are cold but it feels right how my shorts sag. My cloak of a sweater feels good and warm and maybe, if need be, I’ll tuck my knees, assume the fetal pose.

The waves here have a rhythm like a drummer who makes do with a crash cymbal. Here our souls are dragged into the world. They’ve washed ashore. Fomenting in the sand. They turn us upside down, they forcibly remove the sand and water from our lungs, and we exclaim to them that they’ve succeeded. We are born.

At Martin Luther King’s memorial
I almost cried just being there with you.
His home; his church; the ceremonial reflecting pool. You wore a dress. You knew something about our nation’s history I felt I knew, although I didn’t know how to explain it. Hours later, we were having dinner high above the glow of your city, Atlanta, with the floor rotating slowly; and the food was fine, but probably not worth the price of your week’s paycheck. You were sweet then and still mine as I was yours, and would continue to be, months after the cold blew through you, too.
The rising sun is yet another sun
as it eludes its name, always returning as visionary apprehensions, done with us before we have begun our learning in earnest. The sun doesn’t rise, they say:
we change; we spin around ourselves, we spin around the nearest star, passing away in generations as we’re swimming in this oceanic grace; the rivers teem with blood and excrement: dead hearts pulsating with hot piss hot shit flowing in the stream.
However, in the night the light is mating forever, and unknowable, before this endless ocean confined by this shore.